There are many opinions as to which fruit Adam and Eve ate from the Tree of Knowledge. The prominence of the apple in Western European depictions is likely due to either a mistranslation or pun as the words for "evil" and "apple" in Latin are very similar. Many say the fruit was likely a pomegranate, fig, etrog, or even grapes.

In the 18th century, Baghdadi Jews established communities in India, primarily in Surat, Mumbai, and later Kolkata. Today, around 3,000 Jews live in Kolkata, mostly in Bowbazar's Jewish quarter, home to one of India's oldest synagogues.

Once condemned as "rootless cosmopolitans" Jews were accused of belonging nowhere. Yet today, the idea of the Jewish-rooted cosmopolitan turns that notion inside out—celebrating deep roots that travel, traditions that adapt, and a worldview that finds home in connection rather than borders.

In Moroccan Jewish tradition, the end of Yom Kippur is marked by a break fast that begins with light, sweet foods after a day of fasting. Fragrant mint tea is served alongside delicate marzipan cookies and dried figs, whose natural sweetness makes them a fitting and festive way to ease back into eating.

The kiddush ceremony is a Jewish ritual in which a blessing is recited over wine or grape juice to sanctify the Sabbath or a holiday.

Colonia Roma, a historic neighborhood in Mexico City, is known for its Syrian Jewish community, one of the most organized and influential in the diaspora relative to its size. From the beginning, Jews from Aleppo and Damascus maintained separate synagogues, schools, and traditions, preserving communal structures rooted in Syria. Both communities established parallel institutions and social networks that continue to shape life in Mexico City today.

A staple of the seder table, Haroset is a chopped mixture of fruit, wine, and nuts that is said to represent the mortar the Israelites used as slaves in Egypt, as well as the sticking together of the Jewish people. The ingredients for Haroset are found in Song of Songs, a poetic book of the Hebrew Bible about the relationship between two lovers

Nana is a cognate that means "mint" in both Hebrew and Arabic. Mint tea is s a staple beverage that holds a special cultural significance in the Maghreb region of Northwest Africa, where it is enjoyed daily and served as a symbol of hospitality.

Jewish-American produce pioneer Frieda Caplan was the first woman to own and operate a wholesale produce business in the U.S. In 1964, she renamed the Chinese gooseberry "kiwifruit," helping transform the unfamiliar fruit into an American supermarket staple and earning her the nickname "Kiwi Queen."

S'chug (or zhug or Skug) is a Yemenite hot pepper and herb condiment consisting of parsley, cilantro, jalepeño, cumin and coriander. In Israel, it is sometimes referred to as Harif which simply means "hot or "spicy".

Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, is a time of reflection, renewal, and hopes for a sweet year ahead. Apples dipped in honey symbolize sweetness and good fortune. The Shofar, a ram's horn blown during the holiday, calls us to awaken, reflect, and welcome new beginnings.

Shabbat, the Jewish Day of Rest, begins Friday night at sundown. Shabbat dinner opens with blessings for wine and challah followed by a festive meal. For Ashkenazi Jews there is nothing more traditional than a simple roast chicken.

An ancient Yemini condiment, Hilbeh is referenced in the Talmud as early as the 1st century. It's made from fenugreek, known for its medicinal properties and maple-like flavor.
